The high price of everything is the topic of conversation these days. The rabbit is coming in for his share of the conversation as well as a host of other things. Last winter I could buy a rabbit for ten cents. A number of people are now at twenty-five cents per. A colored man was in town with a few rabbits the other day and told a prospective chaser that his rabbits were at five cents each. "Good Grace," said the man, "I used to buy rabbits for ten cents each and I don't know where anything has happened to put the price at rabbit-raising." "Yes," said the old

Being Difficult.

We are accustomed to follow in the footsteps of others to a certain extent, but it is often to a larger degree than we realize. In a way this is true, provided that we choose wisely the path that we follow, but in these conditions we cannot expect to display originality in methods or results. The man who desires to accomplish results that tell must learn to stand upon himself, not alone for the present, but for the future. Of course he must learn to do so easily and before he has done so and declines to conform to any set pattern, he is likely to win the ridicule and discouragement of those who have not had the courage to clear the way before them into new realms of achievement. Being different is a penalty in its early stages of development, because the man who dares to refuse to conform to the path already laid out by those who have gone before him is at first respected and even looked at with admiration by those who lack the courage to do as he is doing. Suspicion very soon gives way to distrust and distrust and fear soon follow to follow the efforts of the lonely pioneer in the fields of new endeavor he arouses the jealousy of the narrow-minded, those whom he has left far behind. It is only when a man reaches the point of view of the ladder of success that he receives the rewards of being different. There are always many men to acclaim his success and applaud not only his achievements but the methods he followed to accomplish them.

To attain to this position, however, it is necessary that a man should first of all put his originality and ambition to the test by making a serious effort to do things in a new and what he expects will prove to be a better way. Having taken this step and being convinced that he is in the right road it is to his interest to persevere resolutely in this endeavor. The lack of sympathy and even the ridicule which may come to him in his new endeavor will soon force him to the front and in this way circumstances may be placed, and once a man is confident of himself and of his chances, he will not be content with a "half-hearted" fight. Nothing can keep a good man down, the world is too big for that, and we suppose it is so that no obstacles, no discouragement, no handicaps will serve to discourage the man of ability from doing to the limit of his capacity.

It is a man's duty to do his best, that he who goes out of his way to exercise his originality does so to reach his goal as quickly as he can. He is not to be discouraged by the fact that he has not yet reached his goal, for he is only a few steps away from it. He is not to be discouraged by the fact that he has not yet reached his goal, for he is only a few steps away from it.

There are some persons who argue that to accomplish anything worth while it is necessary to depart from the approved mode of workmanship, but there are many others who are not prepared to agree to this statement. As in everything else a great deal depends upon the man himself, his initiative, his perseverance, his natural ability and the opportunities which are afforded him, which he makes for himself. It cannot be questioned that given a man possessed of fine natural qualifications he will undoubtedly make good in any conditions, but as a rule not to the extent that he would be allowed the freedom of action afforded in a field not already overworked. It is in many ways a different thing to be given the ability to follow up one's advantages and turn them to the best account.

Notice is hereby given that on Monday, December 24th, 1917, I will make my final return as Guardian of the Estate of John B. Fudge, deceased, to the Judge of Probate for Chester County, S. C., for Letters Discharge. All persons holding claims against said minor are required to present same to me for payment on or before said date, or the same will be barred.

Carrying a Message to the World

As this is perhaps the gravest matter not only in the history of the United States, but of the world, and as President Wilson has at this moment powers and importance beyond reach of any other statesman in the world, it is no wonder that the message which was addressed to the world as much as to Congress was awaited with more avid interest than was ever accorded to such a document before. It is also surprising, there fore, that the distribution of his words to every man in the world that is reached by modern facilities of communication should have started as soon as he began to read it, and that before the reading ended at least its substance had reached every one of the nations of the world directly concerned.

And that, though not quite all the nations of the world, yet three or four, practically all of the world's inhabitants who appreciate the gravity of the present situation, and are intelligent enough to seek prompt information of the kind that seriously affects their welfare, and dignity. Within twenty-four hours, probably a large majority of the world's literates had read at least summaries of the present situation, and were intelligent enough to seek prompt information of the kind that seriously affects their welfare, and dignity. SEVENTY WERE KILLED DURING UPSURISING

Vigo, Spain, Dec. 10.—Seventy persons were killed and 300 or 400 wounded in the uprising in Portugal last week, according to advices reaching here. Most of the houses of the city were damaged by the bombardment. Several projectiles struck the city, and the Spanish minister, including the Spanish minister and the Spanish minister, none of whom was hurt.

During the fight with the revolutionists, the battleship Vasco da Gama was damaged badly. She was stranded on the bank of the river.
